Vice president's message

USPTA membership really is worth the renewal

Let me count the ways ...

I recently received a phone call from a friend of mine who posed a very interesting question to me. This tennis professional is someone who is accomplished in the tennis industry and someone for whom I have a great deal of respect. The question was, "I am considering not renewing my USPTA annual dues this year and am wondering, why should I renew my membership when I already have a solid education and a good job, and I receive all of my personal tennis equipment from another tennis manufacturer?"

This question really hit home with me, because I view this person as an industry leader and was surprised that this tennis professional would consider not renewing. As I analyzed and searched for reasons, the main rationale I kept coming up with is the perception of USPTA membership value. I am sure that this same question has been in the minds of more than one tennis professional, so my quandary was to objectively respond to this question and demonstrate the significance of being a member of the USPTA.

Therefore, the remainder of this article will deal with relative answers to the question, USPTA Membership – Is it really worth the renewal?

The USPTA is a nonprofit trade organization and as such, there are commonalities with nonprofit trade organizations around the country. Author Alan J. Zell's 2002 publication, Ambassador of Selling, gives the following reasons for belonging to an industry trade organization:

a. "One hears lots of excuses why people and firms do not want to join professional or trade associations. Some feel that they do not have the necessary time to attend meetings or continuing education while others believe that the association has little to offer."

b. "These attitudes are not attitudes of successful business people. Successful business people derive maximum use of their memberships. Memberships are seen as "inventory" or assets rather than expenses. Joining and not participating in association activities is passing up opportunities to be better at one's business. It is tantamount to leaving one's inventory sitting idle on the back shelf. Idle money does no one any good."

c. "There are four benefits professional and trade associations offer. Availing oneself of these benefits helps get maximum value for the dollar."

1. "Local level: Rather than thinking that competitors will discover 'our/my secret formula,' a member will learn that others have similar attitudes and problems. An association acts as a forum to bring people together. The purpose is to raise the level of expertise and quality of service for the good of the industry and, more important, for the good of each business's customers and clients."

2. "Attending regional and national meetings: Here one can talk about business problems without the fear of letting secrets out of the bag. In some cases, successful business people set regularly scheduled discussions with their counterparts from other cities to discuss problems and ideas without hurting their local advantages. Because there is no threat to one's business, each is more open to talk about their successes and failures."

USPTA ends Rewards Program

Deadline to redeem Rewards Program points is June 30

USPTA will suspend the incentive-based Rewards Program originally created to reward members for participating in professional development and membership recruitment activities. Effective immediately, members are not able to earn additional points, and the deadline to redeem previously earned points for merchandise is June 30.

The program is being eliminated based on the limited number of ways members could earn points and limited participation by members. If there is more interest in the future, the program may be revived.

Members who currently have points in the Rewards Program are encouraged to apply points toward merchandise in the catalog available at www.USPTA.com. Choices include racquets, balls, string and bags. If members do not have enough points for a particular item, additional points may be purchased for 25 cents per point to make up the difference in the required point total.

Orders will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis. Quantities of product are limited to currently available inventory.

For more information about the Rewards Program and redeeming points, please contact the USPTA Marketing Department at marketing@uspta.org.
